Eugene— July 1, 2019 — Opening today at Café Soriah, and continuing for four months, Eugene painter Jerry Ross has exhibited oil paintings of landscape vistas inspired by Oregon, Italy, and Holland. In addition, portraits, figurative, and still life works are on display.

“Views, like you are in an airplane,” would describe the larger (39 x 44 inch) works.

The Italian word “Veduta” (plural is vedute [vay-du-tay])

Italian 19th century painters often depicted views “from on high” that captured a bird’s eye view of the surrounding countryside. They called these veduta paintings or (plural) vedute.

Jerry Ross' latest works are large, abstract vedute that capture the vast mountain and forest vistas of Oregon:

Other works of note

There are smaller landscapes, portraits, figuratives, and still life paintings placed through the café and bar. One of note is “Mountain stream in the Abruzzo National Park” which captures a winding mountain stream.

“Mountain Stream in the Abruzzo”

Ross exhibits regularly in Italy and Eugene. Jurors who selected his works for a gold medal in Milan, Italy said of his work represented: “...un naturalismo di matrice novecentesca ed un cromatismo tonale di forte effetto plastico costruiscono un'atmosfera compostamente poetica” (“a sort of naturalism founded upon a twentieth-century matrix and a tonal type of chromatism with a strong, sculptural effect, to construct a composed, poetic atmosphere.”)
